In 1911 physician Philip King Brown opened a remarkable Fairfax institution called the Arequipa Sanatorium, where he treated women with tuberculosis. His son, Dr. Cabot Brown, continued his mission until Arequipa closed in 1957. Lynn Downey’s grandmother was a patient there in the 1920s, and Lynn helped preserve the sanatorium’s records. Through historical documents and interviews with former patients, she tells this story in her new book titled Arequipa Sanatorium: Life in California’s Lung Resort for Women.
